Mr. Clark and Other High Union Pacific Officials in Town.

ON AN INSPECTING TOUR

They Take a Peep into the Empty Smelters and Pass the Rest of the Night in Serious Reflection.

A party of Union Pacific officials arrived in this city at 7:35 last evening. The party came from Portland by way of Garrison. On arriving in this city at the depot the gentlemen alighted from their special train, which consisted of two private cars, a baggage car and an engine. After a short consultation with General Manager Burns of the Montana Union the officials once more got on the cars and the train was backed down to the car shops. An inspection was then made of this establishment, and all appeared pleased with what they saw. After this the special train was drawn up the high line to the works, where it was halted and a tour of inspection was made. General Manager Burns acting as escort and pointing out the magnitude of the smelters. By this time it had begun to grow dark and the party boarded the train and began the return trip to the city. When about half way between the depot and the shops the train was stopped and the officials got off and walked up Front street to Main and thence to the Montana, where they remained for the balance of the night.

In an interview with a STANDARD reporter N. J. O'Brien, superintendent of transportation of the Montana Union, said the Union Pacific officials were simply on a tour of inspection. While the members of the party were pleased to see everything in such excellent condition, they regretted that the immense smelters were closed. The party will leave at 7:30 this morning for Butte, and after a short visit in that city will continue eastward. The special cars in which they are traveling are fitted with every modern convenience, the interior being richly furnished. The party consists of S. H. H. Clark, first vice-president and general manager of the Union Pacific; Ed Dickinson, assistant manager; L. H. Korty, superintendent of telegraph; E. Buckingham, superintendent of car service; E. C. Smeade, chief engineer; J. McConnell, superintendent of machinery. While here they were the guests of S. B. Calderhead, general passenger agent, W. Burns, general manager, and N. J. O'Brien, superintendent of transportation of the Montana Union.

A large number of the friends of Miss May Peters attended a celebration given at her residence on Fifth street, in honor of her birthday, last evening. The occasion was a decidedly pleasant one, and the hostess entertained her friends right royally. Excellent music was furnished for dancing and games of various kinds were indulged in. To add to the success of the affair a sumptuous repast was neatly served, of which the visitors clearly showed their appreciation. The young lady received a number of elegant and costly presents.

Gallant Only by Degrees.

His intentions were good, but then there is a famous winter resort that is said to be paved with good intentions, says the Chicago Tribune. His intentions were always good, but he was forgetful.

He overtook the young lady on the street, and after lifting his hat he jammed his hands into his trousers' pockets and sauntered along with her. She looked uncomfortable, and he noticed it at last. Then he stopped short, apologized for his thoughtlessness and threw his cigar away. She simply bowed her acknowledgment of the courtesy, and they sauntered on for a block or two.

Suddenly he yanked his hands from his pockets and let them hang by his side. She turned and smiled again. A little later he stopped in the middle of the story, said "Excuse me," and stepped to the other side of her, for which he got another nod and a mile. Perhaps they had gone two blocks more when another idea occurred to him. He said, "Excuse me," and relieved her of a little sachel she was carrying. A little farther on he apologized for not thinking of it before, and took a book she had under her arm.

There they reached her destination.

"Yes, his intentions are good," she admitted later, "but he goes at it in such a systematic way that I couldn't help feeling glad that the walk was not longer."

"Why so?" asked her friend.

"Because he'd have gotten so gallant in another four blocks that he'd have been carrying me."

"Do you really think so?" asked her friend.

"Why, it would have been the next thing for him to do."

"He's handsome too," mused the friend.

"Why didn't you go on with him? If I meet him we won't stop short of four miles."

Swallowed the Respect.

The mother of Heinrich Heine, the poet, was particularly careful about matters of etiquette, and her boys were brought up with great strictness, and occasional severity. Among other things she was extremely divided in her ideas of table etiquette, and her children's manners in this regard were then thought quite irreproachable, says the Youth's Companion.

They were taught when they were guests at a table never to eat all the food which was put on their plates; a portion must always be left "for respect," so their mother said. Also, they must never take more than a certain fixed amount of sugar in their cups of coffee, no matter what the cravings for it might be.

The last rule was a great trial to Maximilian, Heinrich's younger brother, who had a particularly "sweet tooth."

On one occasion Frau Heine and her children were at a garden restaurant in the suburbs of the city, and had been enjoying the fresh air and good coffee at the same time. As they rose to leave the table, Max, then 7 years old, saw that a large and tempting piece of sugar had been left in the bowl. Thinking himself unobserved, he quickly seized it and put it in his mouth.

Unfortunately for him he had been noticed by Heinrich, who, without meaning to be a tale-bearer, ran to his mother with an express on of horror on his face, as if he expected some calamity would instantly befall them, and said in a shocked and astounded tone:

"Oh, mother, mother, would you believe it, Max has eaten the respect!"
